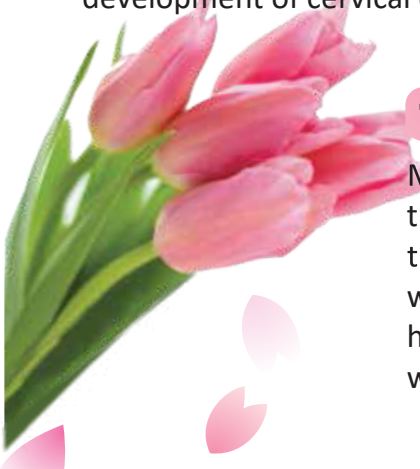
LADIES SCREENING

Having a yearly gynaecological examination is an important aspect of preventive health care and ensuring your physical and reproductive well-being. Every woman should be aware that diseases such as breast, cervical and ovarian cancer have few obvious symptoms, and earlier detection increases chances for survival.

THE IMPORTANCE OF PAP SMEAR

A Pap smear, also called a Pap test, is a procedure to test for cervical cancer in women. A Pap smear involves collecting cells from your cervix. Detecting cervical cancer early with a Pap smear gives you a greater chance at a cure. A Pap smear can also detect changes in your cervical cells that suggest cancer may develop in the future. Detecting these abnormal cells early with a Pap smear is your first step in halting the possible development of cervical cancer.



THE IMPORTANCE OF MAMMOGRAM

Mammogram is a special x-ray examination of the breast done with specific x-ray equipment that can often find tumors too small to be felt with the hand. Screening mammography can help reduce death from breast cancer among women of ages 40 to 74 years.
